

Dawn,

Thank you for connecting us with Cheryl and the "Funding the Future" series. As fellow former social studies teachers, personal finance was never in the forefront of our curriculum, even though the ramifications of being uninformed financially have far greater implications than knowing the difference between micro and macro economic policies.

On behalf of the students and staff of the Schoolcraft 7-12 Campus, we appreciate the opportunity to engage our kids with Carter Hulsey's message. From the onset, Carter was energetic, passionate, and held our students' attention. In fact, as I was standing next to several adults, we all agreed that we wished we had heard Carter's message about credit scores, compounding interest rates, predatory lending, and Roth IRAs while we were in high school. The information was accessible, real world relevant, and appropriate for the quick time Carer and his band were on our campus.

We appreciate the support of KREAS for connecting us with "Funding the Future" and using music as an inroad for engaging our kids with thinking about financial literacy. Our hope is the 75 minutes our kids were with Carter will have a positive impact on their financial awareness for the next 75 years.

Working for each student, everyday,

Matthew Dailey
